I learned that privacy policy is about what you put up on the internet, facebook, myspace, youtube etc, and how much privacy you have. You know how you have the how you can control? Who see what on your facebook page, there's everyone button, friends, or certain people, the best to do is friends, you don't want people important people to see pictures of you high or drunk. That's not again, but you see on websites those long paragraphs, like here. > <http://www.nick.com/info/privacy-policy.html>.

Now when sign-up for it, like making a web page, or signing up for a website, everything you post or write on it, they can bring up them owning it, or if you do something bad, they can go back through your history and show everything you did.

So, that's what a privacy policy.

Digital footprint is when you post something you regret or send something you send to a guy or a girl. Sending pictures of you nude, even forwarding someone sending you something nude, what if your parents got sent it? Another thing that could happen, like always, posting something online that aren't appropriate, from posting pictures of you kissing a guy but you aren't even with them, a tattoo, just anything you know you will regret. Again, think before you post, one mistake it's over. After watching those movies, i learned a lot. Think before you do something! One bad thing, and it's over, pictures of beer, weed, can mean a lot. What if a teacher, princepal, mom, dad, a manger of a job, or someone who let's people into college can see that. You think it's gone? No not even close. People can go back and see them, and if someone important thinks that, you'll lose a lot. So you gotta think before you do, one mistake and it's over.
